I Read the following passage and answer the questions given below : (5)

Just over a hundred years ago, Weddell, a student of Buddhism was walking through a snow - covered hill in Tibet. He was all alone and wrapped up in his own thoughts. Suddenly he saw large footprints in the snow. He stopped, wondering if he was imagining things. Footprints meant living creatures and he had learnt that here on these lonely heights there were no living creatures. And yet, sometimes, he had also heard from the local people about hairy wild men who lived in the snows that never melt. Far from human habitations lived these wild men, covered all over with hair and stomping over the mountainside leaving behind their footprints. Weddell wondered, but found nothing. The footprints were a mystery and remained a mystery.

In 1921, when a British army officer led his army through Tibet, he too saw something- this time not just footprints but figures strangely human in appearance moving across the snow. Colonel Bury was as unsuccessful as Weddell was in solving the mystery. But people were already talking about the strange phenomenon. They called the creature the Abominable Snowman. They were telling stories about it and no one could say if the stories were true or simply imagination. The mountaineers took many photographs of the footprints. Some said that they were only the tracks of the common Himalayan monkey. Others disagreed with them. They said the Himalayan monkey had feet only eight inches long. It could not produce these footprints which were thirteen inches long. These could only belong to the Snowmen. But again, people argued - the snow - tracks could melt in the sun, and this perhaps increased the size of the footprints. And people who believed in the Snowman said that the distance between the footprints was too great - a monkey or a bear could not have made them. The Abominable Snowman, caught the imagination of the world. Newspaper carried regular reports about him, about people seeing him dart across the snow.

In 1979, a Himalayan expedition of the Royal Air - Force saw large tracks on the snow. Twenty miles southeast of Mount Everest. When they were photographing the footprints, they heard a shrill scream from above. After this, Sherpa porters refused to stay there after nightfall. They were afraid the Yeti would attack them. (The word 'Yeti' comes from two Tibetan words - Yeh - The - which means 'the Man of Rocky Places.'). Each year their animals are attacked and killed. This Man of Rocky Places is greatly feared by the local people. The Yeti is shrouded in mystery. No one has proved that he exists; no one has proved that he does not exist. So, scientists, amateurs and professionals, continue to observe closely and investigate. So far nothing has been proved.
